Dear Interior Design Educators,

It is with sense of accomplishment that the 2007-08 IDEC Annual Report is presented to IDEC. As you read the overview of the past year, you will see that a team is much stronger than the individual and our raison d’être is revealed. As past-president, there are many to thank for our accomplishments especially our executive director, Jeff Beachum, Jenni Vincent, Membership & Operations Assistant, Patty Warren, Event Planner and all of the Raybourn team.

The IDEC Board of Directors deserves special appreciation for their guidance and dedication. Most importantly, heartfelt gratitude to the individual—the interior design educator who is dedicated to creating knowledge, opening minds, and shaping futures. The advancement of the Interior Design profession continues through excellence-excellence in teaching, scholarship, and service. Our members teach, nurture, guide, mentor, serve as experts to governmental agencies, serve the profession, learn, research, and create. Interior design educators are truly a versatile and dedicated group of individuals who collectively come together to advance the profession.

The 2007-2008 IDEC Annual Report focuses upon our strategic directions that are designed to advance the profession. You will quickly glean the team effort in our accomplishments. The graduate students who were funded by the IDEC Foundation are also highlighted to emphasize not only the need for educators, but the promise we have in our graduate student scholarship recipients whose goals is are to teach interior design. IDEC is financially healthy allowing for new initiatives in order to continue fulfilling our strategic plan.

While the report summarizes what we have accomplished, there is much left to do. We are in great hands with our executive team, 2008-09 president John Turpin, and our outstanding Board of Directors who will continue to face the challenges of our profession for which there are many. Several critical issues include promoting interior design as a distinctive profession while embracing the various expertises required for educating our students, educating our legislature as to the public welfare and safety attributes of our work, advocating creative scholarship equivalent to traditional research, and increasing the pool of qualified interior design educators. Furthermore, we need to accelerate our efforts to bring an international perspective to IDEC and to interact with our global members. Perhaps most importantly, it is again time to actively pursue one organization representing the profession—a single voice that can symbolically, structurally, and politically advocate interior design as a distinctive profession.

This past year has been most fulfilling. I encourage our new members to actively pursue becoming involved in this fine organization. As you read the report, you will notice all the amazing work of the individual coming together as a team to advance interior design. I thank each of you.

Sincerely,

The stated purpose of the Kimball Working Group for Sustaining Interior Design Education is to identify strategies to promote design education as a career choice and mechanisms by which the pool of qualified interior design educators can be increased.”
Under the leadership of Nancy Blossom, Chair of the JID Board of Directors, the Journal of Interior Design contracted with Blackwell Publishing in 2007. Blackwell publishing maintains excellence in electronic publishing resulting in JID being accessible world-wide. Electronic publishing also supports IDEC’s commitment to sustainability. The transition to Blackwell’s first publication is expected to conclude with the Fall 2008 Issue. In addition to being green and having a global reach, authors now enjoy an expedient manuscript submission process with a complete electronic submission and review process.

Stephanie Clemons has been selected by the JID Board of Directors and approved by the IDEC Board of Directors to become the new President of the JID Board beginning May 1, 2008.

Jo Ann Thompson nears the conclusion of her second term as the JID Editor-In-Chief and the call for a new editor-in-Chief has begun.

With the support from the Anna Brightman Fund the JID sponsored an Historical Symposium held in March 2008 just prior to the IDEC Annual Conference in Montreal. It proved to be a highly successful event yielding eight submissions on topics related to the history of interiors to JID.
Jean Edwards has made significant contributions to interior design education in the areas of teaching, scholarship, and service to IDEC. Within the academy, Jean Edwards has served in a leadership role and is a strong promoter of interdisciplinary efforts as well as excellence in interior design education. Jean is considered by colleagues to be an excellent mentor and has become a highly valued member of the university community. Jean’s service to IDEC has been at both the regional and national levels and has earned a Presidential Merit Award. She has become a familiar face at both regional and international conferences passionately promoting causes important to our profession. As one nominator remarked, one always knows where our Jean stands on the issues. Another nominator wrote: “It was Jean’s vision and insight to change the Juried Design Competition from an amateur event to a professional level that can be respected by other professional interior design organizations.”

Eric Weidegreen has been actively involved with interior design education and IDEC for a number of years. In a letter of nomination, one educator suggested that Eric “brings a unique combination of strengths to the academy, with involvement in professional practice, the ability to work with others, and a passion for design.”

Eric’s contributions to IDEC have been sustained, dedicated, and numerous. Included among this person’s specific contributions are service as a network chair, regional chair, conference host, and involvement with IDEC special projects. In particular, Eric spearheaded discussion on issues that are keys to our profession, such as graduate education and the declining pool of interior design educators. He has been an excellent spokesperson for our organization, and another nominator concurs when she writes that Eric is “one of IDEC’s best, most enthusiastic, and loyal supporters.”

IT IS WITH GREAT PLEASURE THAT WE WELCOME JEAN EDWARDS AND ERIC WIEDEGREEN, TO THE COLLEGE OF FELLOWS.
The 2008 IDEC Annual Conference was held March 5 – March 8, 2008 in Montréal, Quebec at the Fairmont The Queen Elizabeth with 385 people in attendance. The theme of the conference was “Raison d’etre – Reason for Being” hosted by Tiitu Poldma, chair and Sophie Leduc, co-chair from the University of Montreal. Erik Peterson, Senior Vice President of the Center for Strategy and International Studies was the keynote speaker presenting Seven Futures—the key regions of the world that will have the most impact upon the world by 2025. Donna Cummings and Marian Marshall, renown Canadian interior designers presented their viewpoints on the future of interior design and its relationship to education. Over 120 scholarly and creative papers were presented on a variety of topics related to interior design. The Fellows Forum examined graduate education as a critical resource for fostering evidence based design, contributing to the Body of Knowledge, and increasing the pool of interior design educators. The annual Towne Hall meeting resulted in lively dialogue and the membership called for a position statement from IDEC reinforcing interior design as a distinctive profession that supports CIDA as the accrediting body and NCIDQ as the certification agency for interior design. The exhibit hall welcomed 12 supporting exhibitors, ensuring the conference’s success.

EMERGENCY “RAINEY DAY” FUND

Seven years ago, your board of directors, with the encouragement of the membership, began accumulating an emergency fund that would eventually be equal to approximately a one year budget for IDEC. Significant progress has been made and more than $300,000 has been saved for an unforeseen “rainy day experience.” Congratulations!
