Meaning ‘to grow together’, Coalesce acts as a vocational centre for those with Autism Spectrum Disorder and other cognitive disabilities to merge into the working society. Stemming from the notion of connection, the design was structured around blossoms that work to ease shifts in function for those with hyper- or hypo-sensitivities. The notion of growth is illustrated through the flowing configuration of space and is translated into the volumetric design through the use of forms found in nature. Warm hues and earthy textures are used to accentuate the organic nature of the design and to create a feeling of comfort and connection for the users of the space.
